Every minute, malaria kills over 100 people, 95% of its victims are children. Now, an international team is preparing to make a giant leap towards the total eradication of the disease. In Magude, a district of Mozambique's capital Maputo, an army of scientists, field workers and local leaders has come together to eliminate malaria from the area, populated by over 60.000 people. If they win the battle, it will be the beginning of the end. They will have found the formula which the World Health Organization will then apply to eradicate the disease world-wide.
